INITIATING DIALOGUE

REDIAFOR is an exploratory project on conflicts in the Alpine forests. As part of this project, participants identified and analysed problems stemming from conflicts of interest and risks around the multifunctional use of our forests (REDIAFOR survey). This project has also laid a foundation for transnational and national dialogue between experts, forestry stakeholders, and regional authorities to strengthen their ability to manage these conflicts (discussion workshops and REDIAFOR training sessions).

This communication kit was created to foster better understanding between society and the mountain forest community by making the technical and sometimes scientific forestry language more accessible. It invites all stakeholders to recognise and share this common heritage and overcome the tensions sparked by sometimes divergent interests to strengthen the resilience of the alpine forest as a whole.

The various components of this kit are mainly intended for the general public (poster, climate change fact sheet) but can also be useful to professionals (conflict management fact sheet). The project has also produced technical deliverables that can be downloaded on www.rediafor.com.

The kit can be used by Alpine areas and their decision makers (whether they own public forests or not) and shared with the general public. It can also be used by private forest owners, managers, environmental organisations, and so on. The kit may also be useful to partners in the fields of pastoralism, tourism, nature conservation, natural risks, water management, hunting, and seasonal employment

CONDITIONS AND RESTRICTIONS OF USE:

The REDIAFOR communication kit (poster and fact sheets) may be printed and used without restriction. The poster and fact sheets may be used separately. However, the illustrations cannot be copied from the poster for use on their own without first informing the Communes forestières Auvergne-Rhône-Alpes, (auvergnerhonealpes@communesforestieres.org).
